Past performance should not be seen as a guide to future performance and may not be repeated. The value of investments may go down as well as up and investors may not get back the amount originally invested, are not certain to make a profit and may lose money. Performance is quoted using close of business valuations and may differ from statement values, which use dealing valuations. Exchange rate changes may cause the value of overseas investments to rise or fall. Investors should be aware that investment in emerging markets involves a high degree of risk and should be seen as long term in nature. Where a fund is invested with another life company by means of a reinsurance arrangement, we monitor the way the reinsurer manages the business, but we do not guarantee the solvency of the reinsurer, so the risk of default by the reinsurer is borne by policyholders who invest in the relevant fund. ## Market Commentary

Global stockmarkets experienced a sharp rebound in the final quarter of 2011. This was a recovery from the setback of the third quarter when markets were very concerned that the US would not raise its debt ceiling and that various peripheral Eurozone countries may default and potentially leave the Euro.

The emerging economies have continued to see slowing growth, and China, in particular, has been using monetary policy actively to engineer a soft landing. The main concern in many global emerging economies is to balance inflationary pressures, with the need to ensure business cycle expansion for as long as possible, whilst encouraging internal demand.

Fixed Interest markets experienced yet another positive return this quarter, as gilts benefitted from the significant uncertainty in global sovereign bond markets. Corporate bonds lagged gilts over the quarter, however, the sector still is, in our view, relatively attractive versus cash or gilts.

The general lull in global growth experienced recently combined with broadly disappointing global macro news-flow leads us to be cautious on investment markets in the short-term. On a more positive note, companies appear to be in reasonable shape globally, and many have strong balance sheets and are maintaining a good dividend policy. Financially, companies appear to be in a better position to weather a market downturn than they were in 2008. However, the periodic setbacks and occasional weaker patches are expected to continue as market sentiment fluctuates and policy makers struggle to deliver appropriate solutions. In the long-term, it is our view that markets and the global economy will move forward and grow, albeit below trend.
